Supplementary Materials: Predictive Modeling of Soft Stretchable Nanocomposites Using Recurrent Neural Networks

Josué García-Ávila [1,2], Diego de Jesus Torres Serrato [1,3], Ciro. A. Rodriguez [1,4], Adriana Vargas Martínez [1,4], Erick Ramírez Cedillo [1,4,5,] and J. Israel Martínez-López [1,4,5,6,]

[1]   Tecnologico de Monterrey, Escuela de Ingeniería y Ciencias, Monterrey 64849, Mexico;
     garcia.josue@tec.mx (J.G.-Á.); a00826986@tec.mx (D.d.J.T.S.); ciro.rodriguez@tec.mx (C.A.R.); adriana.vargas.mtz@tec.mx (A.V.M.)
[2]   Department of Mechanical Engineering, Stanford University, Stanford, CA 94305-2004, USA;
     jgarciaa@stanford.edu
[3]   DTU Nanolab, National Centre for Nano Fabrication and Characterization, Technical University of Denmark, 2800 Kgs.
     Lyngby, Denmark; s222362@dtu.dk
[4]   Laboratorio Nacional de Manufactura Aditiva y Digital MADiT, Apodaca 66629, NL, Mexico;
[5]   3D Factory, Ramon Treviño 1109, Monterrey 64580, Mexico
[6]   Centro de Investigación Numericalc, 5 de mayo 912 Oriente, Monterrey 64000, NL, Mexico
[*]   Correspondence: erickramce@tec.mx (E.R.C.); israel.mtz@tec.mx (J.I.M.-L.)
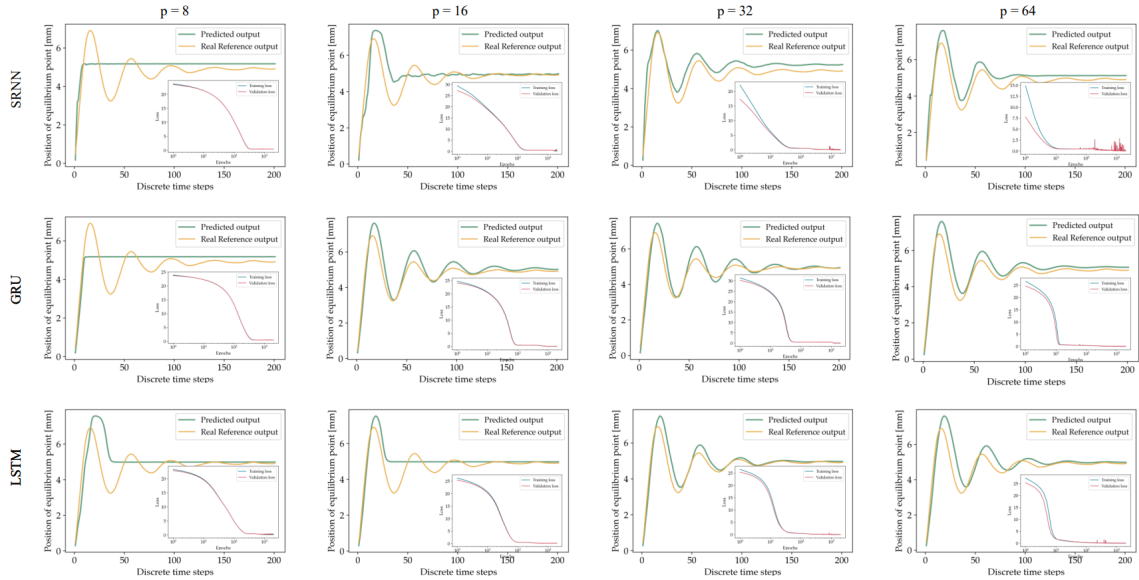

Figure S1. Predicted and real reference outputs of the SRNN, GRU, and LSTM architectures with their training, and validation losses for different number of unitsp.