It is beyond any doubt that chemistry has provided countless products improving the quality of human life in practically all areas. Unfortunately, some of the products have proved to be hard to dispose of, not biodegradable or toxic. Recently, much care has been taken to ensure that chemical products should be first of all safe for humans. According of the approaches to one cosmetic/pharmaceutical products used should be based on natural raw materials. With the use of physical, chemical, and biochemical processes, these raw materials can be transformed into intermediates that are later used to produce high-value chemicals, polymers, lubricants, solvents or surfactants, and special products, which until now have been obtained using fossil fuels.
