Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

In the recent past, several new candidates were identified for neglected tropical diseases (NTDs). While the first drugs were registered, e.g., fexinidazole for sleeping sickness or miltefosin and paromomycin combination for leishmaniasis in Africa, more drug candidates are in development (e.g., phase 2b/3 studies for leishmaniasis, Chagas disease or mycetoma). However, for some NTDs, the pipeline of new drug candidates is not well equipped, and only a few candidates are within phase 1 or 2 clinical trials (e.g., for onchocerciasis). In the present Special Issue, we ask authors to submit original research and review articles that relate to drug candidates for NTDs with special emphasis on their formulation, dosage form, drug delivery and pharmacokinetics, etc., as is the scope of the journal.
