This Special Issue will explore a diverse array of topics in homiletical theory and praxis. Scholars are encouraged to submit proposals in the following areas: homiletical theory; Jewish or Christian homiletical practices from antiquity to modern times; christology, pneumatology, or another dimension of theology framed via preaching in a particular historical era; reception history of a biblical passage or figure analyzed through medieval, early modern, or contemporary sermon studies; homiletics in light of aesthetics, performance studies, or trauma studies; feminist, postcolonial, or womanist homiletics; eco-preaching and the global climate crisis; and interdisciplinary studies positioned at the nexus of homiletics and cultural studies, social ethics, liturgics, or political theory.

Prior to submitting a manuscript, interested authors should submit a proposed title and an abstract of 200 words summarizing their intended contribution via email to the guest editor, Dr. Carolyn J. Sharp (carolyn.sharp@yale.edu) by 15 April 2023.
