Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Key areas of exploration for this Special Issue include but are not limited to:

Intersectionality and Global Perspective: Investigating the intersectional identities of immigrant women, including their ethnicity, age, socioeconomic status, immigration status, and other intersecting factors; and adopting a global lens to encompass immigrants from diverse regions worldwide, providing a comprehensive view of the immigrant experience.

Social Determinants: Analyzing how social determinants such as discrimination, acculturation, access to healthcare, economic disparities, and legal status influence the health and well-being of immigrant women.

Coping Mechanisms: Exploring the strategies, both individual and collective, that immigrant women employ to navigate these challenges. This may include examining social support networks, community resources, and culturally relevant coping mechanisms that contribute to resilience.

Health Disparities: Investigating the health disparities that immigrant women face, which may be shaped by a multitude of factors. Authors should critically assess these disparities while considering unique challenges and strengths of immigrant communities.
