Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The importance of intellectual capital as a strategic resource has been known since ancient times. Firms' interest in such topics has exhibited a rapid growth, which is more notable in firms whose benefits originate primarily from innovation and knowledge-intensive services. Nevertheless, this is not only a topic applicable to firms. Intellectual capital management is also pertinent for governmental and no lucrative organizations. Its study of the territories should not be ignored because, although few have so far studied their wealth on intellectual capital terms, there is no debate over the importance of intellectual capital on territory development. Therefore, with the objective of increasing the knowledge on this topic, the purpose of this Special Issue is to publish articles of empirical research and theoretical high-quality reviews that study the relation between intellectual capital and sustainability.
