Supplementary Materials

The root extract of Rosa multiflora ameliorates nonalcoholic steatohepatitis development via blockade of de novo lipogenesis and inflammation

Nam-Hee Kim[1*], Seung-Jin Lee[1*], Kyeong-Jin Lee[1], Ae Ri Song[3], Hyun-Je Park[3], Jong Soo Kang[3], Joo Young Cha[3#], and Yong-Hyun Han[1,2#]

[1]Laboratory of Pathology and Physiology, College of Pharmacy, [2]Multidimensional Genomics Research Center, Kangwon National University, Chuncheon 24341, South Korea

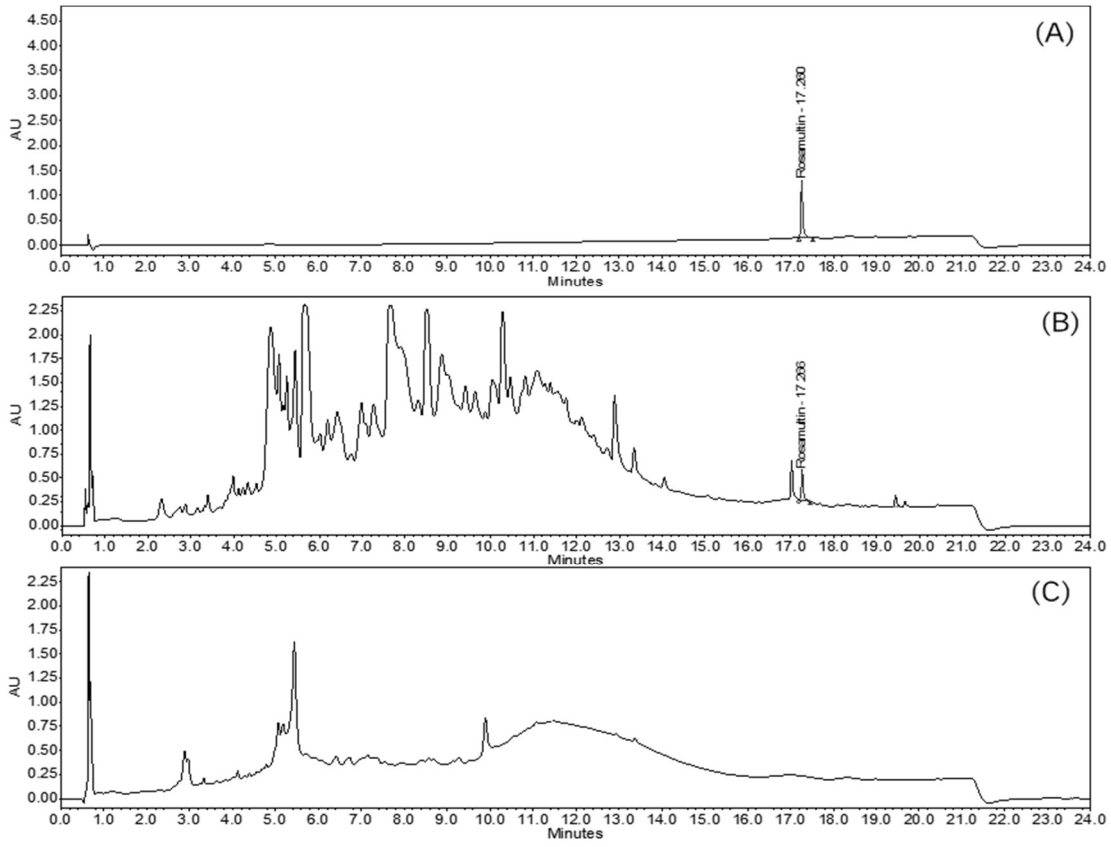

[3]Yuhan Care Co., Ltd., Yuhan Care R&D Center, Yongin-si 17084, Gyeonggi-do, South Korea

[*] These authors contributed equally to this work.

[#] Correspondence to: Joo Young Cha, Yuhan Care Co., Ltd., Yuhan Care R&D Center, , Tel: +82-31-303-0065, E-mail: jycha@yuhancare.com

Yong-Hyun Han, PhD, Laboratory of Pathology and Physiology, College of Pharmacy, Kangwon National University, Tel: +82-33-250-6908, E-mail: yhhan1015@kangwon.ac.kr

Supplementary Figure

Supplementary Figure S1. Composition profiles of YC-1102

High-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC) results of (A) rosamultin as standard, (B) YC-1102 and (C) water extract of Rosa multiflora root