

Figure S2. Rhizoctonia tuliparum isolated from bulbous iris and grown on potato dextrose agar produced “lab-grown” sclerotia that were slightly different in appearance (left) from a mixture of “natural light” and “natural dark” sclerotia of R. tuliparum (right) that were collected directly from soil around diseased iris bulbs.

