Figure S1. Precipitation comparison between 2006–2016 (current/historical) and 2070–2099 (future) for the CORDEX RCP 8.5 models that support the selection of our two future models. The CanESM2.CanRCM4 model shows the wettest winter and spring for the current climate compared to future projections and the GFDL-ESM2M.WRF model is the driest (winter and spring) in comparison to the future climate.

Trends in weekly, seasonal, and annual streamflow

Table S3. Seasonal and annual trends for minimum and maximum streamflow (m<sup>3</sup>/s) for 1991-2099 for GFDL-ES2M. Trends are values occurring over the 109 year time period. Bold values indicate significant trends (p-value <= 0.05).
