Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to contribute to this debate in a spatial perspective. Articles should address aspects of how regions or cities can include groups with comparatively weak degrees of economic participation, and how to develop their regional or local development accordingly. The Special Issue welcomes particularly empirical work on the representation and contribution of groups, such as women, youth, senior citizens, people with special needs, immigrants, or ethnic minorities in local or regional development, as well as policy-oriented papers developing evidence-based policy conclusions for policymakers on the local and regional levels. Comparative research is encouraged.
