Widening International Entrepreneurship Research

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue seeks original research on a wide range of topics that still limit our understanding of the early internationalization phenomenon, which includes (but is not limited to):

- The influence of contextual variables in promoting international entrepreneurship, with a special interest in the role of universities and local and national governments.
- Social entrepreneurship and its relationship with different international pathways.
- The relations among international entrepreneurship strategy and other entrepreneurial strategies such as spin-offs, business transfers or born-again globals.
- The role of new technologies such as digitalization in the process of discovering and exploiting entrepreneurial opportunities in an international context.
- New perspectives in the study of social networks and social capital.
- The relationship between IE and performance.
- How human resource management can contribute to the strategy of early internationalization.
