Knowledge Work Management

Message from the Guest Editor

Knowledge in organisations resides both within a given organisation and with the individuals within it.

Organisations usually deal with knowledge management while an individual knowledge worker is often left to personally deal with their own productivity. The purpose of this Special Issue is to explore the management of knowledge on both organisational and individual bases with the purpose of improving productivity. Academics are encouraged to look at their field in regard to the overall management of productivity, including two dyads: organisations vs. individuals; knowledge management vs. knowledge worker productivity.

Keywords

- knowledge management
- knowledge worker
- knowledge worker productivity

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Welcome to Administrative Sciences, the journal aims to advance and communicate knowledge concerning management theory and practice both in public administration and in profit organizations; it encourages submissions that build on interdisciplinary research in related fields, such as business, economics, political science, gender studies, psychology, sociology, physiology, communication theory or artificial intelligence and their implications on management, organizations and the society. Join us on a journey through the Administrative Sciences, where management merges with innovation.
