COVID-19-Related Mental Health Effects in the Workplace

Message from the Guest Editors

The COVID-19 pandemic is dramatically changing the world of labor with strong repercussions for workers' well-being, occupational health and safety practices, organizational health, and business development. Despite major advances in managing the COVID-19 health emergency, evidence points to possible long-term coexistence with the virus and the need for adequate worker health promotion and prevention strategies. Furthermore, one of the key challenges of the future of work concerns how to make hybrid work suitable and manage a blended workforce. Hence, the purpose of the manuscripts in this Special Issue on COVID-19-Related Mental Health Effects in the Workplace should be to: 1) analyze the negative implications of COVID-19 for different occupational populations while investigating the possible positive aspects (e.g., resilience, posttraumatic growth, technological progress) in order to design targeted interventions...

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Welcome to Administrative Sciences, the journal aims to advance and communicate knowledge concerning management theory and practice both in public administration and in profit organizations; it encourages submissions that build on interdisciplinary research in related fields, such as business, economics, political science, gender studies, psychology, sociology, physiology, communication theory or artificial intelligence and their implications on management, organizations and the society. Join us on a journey through the Administrative Sciences, where management merges with innovation.
