The Impact of Environmental Factors on Fruit Quality

Message from the Guest Editor

Agricultural production places an increased focus on sustainable development. This also applies to horticulture, where the aim is to obtain high-quality crops and, at the same time, a biological balance of ecosystems. Therefore, new environmentally friendly fruit production systems are being developed, in which growing methods and techniques strongly rely on environmental conditions. This involves breeding new cultivars with enhanced resistance to adverse factors, using crop rotation to limit the exposure to pathogens in soil, organic mulching, stimulating biological processes in the rhizosphere, and applying biological preparations for plant protection and nutrition, in order to improve fruit quality [...]
