Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Livestock production sustainability is presently imperative. Among the different environmental impacts, global warming is considered the most dangerous, and methane emission from animals and slurries plays a significant role. Different nutritional and feeding techniques, as well as appropriate management of slurries, can be adopted to reduce methane emission. However, milk and meat production must not be hampered, given the increasing demand for food of animal origin worldwide. Hence, the challenge is to maintain milk and meat yield with a reduction in methane emission. Scientists are invited to provide contributions on the matter, for different animal species and livestock production systems.
