Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The culture of salmonids represents just the 4.2% of the global seafood supply, but is one of the most profitable of the aquaculture industry around the world. Highly intensive and technically developed, the aquaculture industry of salmonids now requires new approaches to find a continuous and sustainable growth. Thus, this Special Issue of Animals is focused on the culture and welfare of species of salmonids. Original manuscripts for this Special Issue are welcome, particularly those that cover the following subjects: (1) development of sustainable feeds for salmonid production; (2) culture process and stress on salmonids, including development and control of disease and parasitisms; and (3) general welfare of salmonids.
