

Special Issue

Gamete, Embryo and Larvae Handling in Aquatic Animals

Message from the Guest Editors

The aim of this Special Issue is to bring together original research studies and review papers on basic and applied aspects of gamete, embryo and larvae handling in aquatic animals. In that sense, we aim to gather high-quality papers addressing different areas focused on gamete collection and handling, gamete storage (both short- and long-term storage), in vitro fertilization techniques, embryo development studies, and larvae management of different aquatic animals. Researchers working in fish reproduction both with an approach on aquaculture industry or on biodiversity preservation are welcome to contribute in-depth reviews, original full articles, and unique case reports.
