Current Knowledge and Recent Advances on Equine Internal Medicine

Message from the Guest Editor

Animals is preparing a Special Issue on Equine Internal Medicine that will focus on recent advances in diseases with a high impact in our field: the scope may include (but is NOT limited to) cardiology, endocrinology, non-infectious respirology, gastric ulcers, laminitis, infectious hepatitis, viral encephalitis, and colitis. The objective is to include a minimum of six of these topics, with one review article and one accompanying research article on each. We aim to first provide an overview of our current understanding of disease pathophysiology and the standard of care in the review article, followed by the novel research study showing recent advances in the field. The aim of this Special Issue is to gather 12 to 16 articles with state-of-the-art knowledge, including diagnostic and management recommendations, combined with the most recent research advances in some of the most important areas of equine internal medicine practice at present.
