Artistic Imagination and Social Imaginaries–Polysemous Readings of Historical Travelling Accounts

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue of Arts (ISSN 2076-0752) investigates the history and legacy of colonialism by gathering researchers, artists, and activists to read medieval traveling accounts together. The chosen texts document a period when European theologians, missionaries, and merchants encountered peoples and lands that were new to them and show an early Western impetus toward Eurocentric scientific universalism regarding materiality, the environment, and embodiment (Pratt 2008; Carter 2023; Jennings 2017). We pose questions such as the following: What can be learned from descriptions of encounters with “the Other” and unknown lands, creatures, and places? How can we engage with the minority or silenced voices in these colonial accounts? What role can various artistic practices play in reimagining different worlds and retelling “lost” stories? Through these polysemous readings, we aim to investigate new and innovative ways for past narratives to support the acknowledgement of present-day power imbalances.
