Life Satisfaction and Mental Health in Migrant Children

Message from the Guest Editor

Migrant children represent a unique and vulnerable population facing various challenges related to adaptation, acculturation, and wellbeing. Understanding their life satisfaction and mental health is crucial in ensuring their successful integration into new environments, alongside being informative for policy and service development. Behavioral Sciences is pleased to announce a Special Issue dedicated to advancing research on "Life Satisfaction and Mental Health in Migrant Children". We invite scholars, researchers, and practitioners to contribute original research articles, reviews, theoretical discussions, empirical studies, and intervention developments that shed light on the multifaceted aspects of life satisfaction and mental health among migrant children.
