

Special Issue

Emerging Directions in Positive Psychology and the Application Thereof

Message from the Guest Editor

I am excited to propose an upcoming Special Issue of Behavioral Sciences on “Emerging Directions in Positive Psychology and the Application Thereof”. We are experiencing a time where financial and resource restrictions are having an adverse impact on people’s abilities to seek physical and mental aid in an efficient and patient-centred manner. More and more, we are seeing how collaborations between academics and service providers are seeking to ameliorate this service gap through aligned positive psychological interventions (e.g., mindfulness, nature connectedness) and how some academics in the West are drawing upon Eastern philosophies to supplement such interventions (e.g., ikigai). Within this Special Issue, we call on academics, practitioners, service users, and policy makers to further our knowledge and showcase some of the contemporary developments in this area. It is vital that we capture under-reached and international voices within this compilation.
