

Special Issue

Clinical Psychology Research and Public Health

Message from the Guest Editors

Researchers and academics are invited to contribute with studies in the field of clinical psychology that have an impact on public health (mental health, behavior problems, adverse childhood experiences, substance use, stress and burnout, eating or sleeping disorders, addictions, etc.). We encourage studies that focus on psychological problems of vulnerable individuals or groups that can become a public health issue (e.g., chronic diseases). For more details, please see: Clinical Psychology Research and Public Health
