Recent Advances in the Lipid Nanoparticles

Message from the Guest Editor

Lipid based nanoparticles as promising vehicles to deliver therapeutics for medical purposes have emerged across various pharmaceuticals and industries. They play an important role in the effective delivery of drugs to target organs, and in transporting mRNA, drugs and genes to cells. We cordially invite authors and researchers within this recent field of universal interest to submit original research or review articles pertaining to this Special Issue. Studies and opinion related to synthesis of lipid based nanoparticles, challenges and their recent application in various field such as medicine, pharmacy, environment, medical imaging, agrochemicals and nutrition.
