Gynecological Tumor and Placenta Development

Message from the Guest Editors

The trophoblast and cancer cells share many capacities such as cell proliferation, invasion and fusion, modulation of immune response, angiogenesis and many signalling and biochemical pathways, suggesting thus that trophoblast may serve as an ideal model for the study of malignancy or vice-versa. This special issue is devoted to original basic, translational or clinical research or review articles that focus on angiogenesis, invasion, cell fusion and immune system modulation in gynaecological tumor and/or placenta development. It could be of interest to a broad range of readers including physicians, scientists, students, and biology of reproduction communities.
