Mechanism and Modulation in Sepsis

Message from the Guest Editors

Sepsis remains to be associated with significant morbidity and mortality. The importance of organ injury was recognized in this process and is now included in the diagnostic criteria for sepsis in the most recent sepsis conference (Sepsis-3 conference), replacing the concept of sepsis as mere “systemic inflammatory diseases”. Thus, it is critical to understand the mechanism of organ injury in sepsis, thereby developing an approach to attenuate it. This Special Issue focuses on studies deciphering the mechanism and modulation of organ injury in sepsis, hoping to improve outcomes of sepsis.
