Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Myelin sheaths that insulate and nourish CNS axons are produced by oligodendrocytes, highly metabolic cells that are vulnerable to trauma induced neurotoxicity and to autoimmune attack in diseases such as multiple sclerosis. This special issue will collect articles that address ongoing research into promoting myelin repair, including strategies to suppress innate immune attack, to promote endogenous repair processes, and to supplement this repair with exogenous cell grafts.

Dr. Randall D. McKinnon
Guest Editor