Vascular Contributions to Cognitive Impairments

Message from the Guest Editor

Vascular contributions to cognitive impairments have been fascinating, and the immunological mechanisms underlying cognitive impairments remain to be determined. The interaction of cerebrovascular cells and immune cells in Alzheimer's disease is largely unknown. The role of risk factors including aging. cardiovascular diseases, and chronic inflammation are also attracting attention by researchers to investigate the novel mechanisms underlying the pathogenesis of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias. The present Special Issue aims to include research in all the areas related to studies in Alzheimer's disease and related dementias, cerebrovascular dysfunction, and cerebrovascular-immune cell interaction. We invite manuscripts in the form of original research, reviews. mini-reviews, and short communications investigating/commenting on the novel mechanisms of the pathogenesis of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias.
