Biomarkers in Neurotology

Message from the Guest Editors

Neurotology is a specialty closely related to vestibular and ear diseases (Meniere's disease, vestibular neuronitis, vestibular schwannoma, facial nerve paralysis, otosclerosis, otitis, benign paroxysmal positional vertigo) and hearing disorders (tinnitus, hearing loss, deafness). The diagnosis and therapy of neurotological disorders are complex. The identification of biomarkers for neurotological disorders could help to better understand their underlying pathophysiological mechanisms, differential diagnosis, and response to therapy. In recent decades, clinical and biochemical markers, including imaging techniques and genetics, have emerged as promising tools for neurotology. The current Special Issue of Brain Sciences aims to present the latest research on the role of clinical and biochemical markers for adult and pediatric neurotology. Authors are invited to submit relevant original research and review papers.
