Using Neuroimaging to Explore Neurodegenerative Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

Neuroimaging advancements have revolutionized our understanding of neurodegenerative diseases, offering unprecedented insights into pathophysiology, early diagnosis, and therapeutic innovation. This Special Issue, “Using Neuroimaging to Explore Neurodegenerative Diseases” aims to compile cutting-edge research and interdisciplinary perspectives on the application of neuroimaging to unravel the complexities of neurodegeneration. We welcome contributions addressing: (1) emerging technologies; (2) novel biomarkers for diagnosing and disease tracking; (3) multimodal integration; (4) AI-driven analytics for subtype classification or prognostic modeling; (5) clinical translation of imaging findings; and (6) cross-disciplinary synergies with genomics, proteomics, and digital health tools. Submissions may include original research articles, reviews articles, systematic reviews, short communications that bridge technical advancements with clinical or mechanistic insights.
