Message from the Guest Editor

As the main cause of mortality in elderly patients after curative sections is noncancer-related death, in elderly patients and/or those with severe underlying diseases, additional surgery should be considered carefully when selecting a post-ESD treatment strategy for patients undergoing non-curative resection. Accumulating retrospective and prospective data is needed to resolve such remaining issues even within the maturation of technical aspects and is the focus of this Special Issue, “ESD to Date”, where we would like to summarize the most recent studies on gastrointestinal ESD from the standpoint of earlier cancer management and perspectives to resolve various issues in the context of an increasingly aging society.

Cancers is an international online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal is publishing in Open Access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.

Author Benefits
