Gynecological Cancer: Prevention, Diagnosis, Prognosis and Treatment

Message from the Guest Editors

Gynecological cancers, including ovarian, cervical, endometrial, vaginal, and vulvar malignancies, represent a significant global health burden. Despite advancements in medical research, early detection, prevention strategies, and therapeutic options remain critical challenges in managing these malignancies. This Special Issue aims to bring together cutting-edge research on the prevention, diagnosis, prognosis, and treatment of gynecological cancers. We invite authors to explore innovative diagnostic tools, novel therapeutic approaches, and strategies to reduce the incidence of these cancers. The Special Issue will provide insights into molecular mechanisms, personalized medicine, and emerging trends in treatment, ultimately aiming to improve patient outcomes and survival rates.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Cancers (ISSN 2072-6694) is an international, online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal will continue its open access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.
