Facial Paralysis in Cancer Patients—from Diagnosis to Treatment and Facial Reanimation

Message from the Guest Editors

We welcome the submission of articles that provide a range of perspectives on this topic. This should include the diagnosis of cancer in patients with facial paralysis and imaging (for example, high-resolution imaging to detect small carcinomas along the facial nerve), preoperative planning, and cancer treatment (to guarantee R0 resection without damaging the nerve, and if the facial nerve has to be resected, determine how it can be reanimated during cancer surgery or after).

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Cancers is an international online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal is publishing in Open Access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.
