Human Papillomavirus (HPV) Associated Head and Neck Lesions

Message from the Guest Editors

It is now well recognized that Human Papillomaviruses play a decisive role in the carcinogenesis of head and neck cancers, whether or not in association with other risk factors such as tobacco and alcohol. This Special Issue is dedicated to HPV-induced head and neck cancers in terms of their epidemiology, clinical behavior and therapeutic management. It will also present their more fundamental specificities in terms of molecular biology, tumor microenvironment, etc. This Special Issue welcomes the submission of reviews, as well as original research articles, by March 2024.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Cancers is an international online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal is publishing in Open Access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.
