Colorectal Cancers: From Present Problems to Future Solutions Volume II

Message from the Guest Editor

Colorectal cancer is one of the most frequent cancer entities in humans. The scientific community has made significant progress in our molecular understanding of colorectal carcinogenesis, of hereditary as well as sporadic colorectal cancer types, this pertaining to the discovery of, e.g., (mutated) oncogenes and tumor suppressor genes, microsatellite instabilities, modifications in DNA repair, cellular aging, signaling cascades; genomic, epigenetic, transcriptional, translational, and protein modifications; as well as microbiotic factors and further parameters

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Cancers (ISSN 2072-6694) is an international, online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal will continue its open access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.

Editor-in-Chief
