

Special Issue

A Horizon Scan of Research Achievements, Opportunities and Emerging Issues in Environmental, Agricultural and Urban Systems in Developing Nations

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue focuses on the achievements, emerging issues, opportunities, and challenges in environmental, agricultural and urban systems in developing countries with a special focus on Africa.

We invite high-quality manuscripts addressing, but not limited to:

- Environmental pollution
- Emerging contaminants
- Urban agriculture
- Sustainable cities/urban development
- Urban informal settlements
- Urban infrastructure
- Waste management systems
- Climate change
- Sustainability in agriculture and mining
- Green innovations in water and wastewater treatment
- Recent developments in environmental technology
- Innovative research collaboration/funding models
- Environmental/sustainability education and capacity-building

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Addressing scientific advancements and technological processes responding to societal needs are the new frontiers that humankind needs to face and cope with. Discovery and advances in basic research, synthetic biology, biochemistry, material science and biosystems engineering, are providing cutting edge progress and solutions. Scientists from multidiscipline fields are invited to discuss challenging science and research, and technology innovations in Challenges aimed towards solving current problematic issues.
