Message from the Guest Editor

Abusive head trauma (AHT) is one of the most challenging diagnoses in pediatrics. The diagnosis is based on history, physical examination, imaging, and laboratory findings. Whether in the clinical or in the post mortem setting, diagnosing AHT is always a multidisciplinary task with great significance for both child protection and possible legal consequences.

This Special Issue aims to provide an update on the current knowledge, and to highlight the latest advances and newest insights into AHT. I hope that this Special Issue will be of interest not only for pediatricians, pediatric radiologists, and forensic physicians, but also for all the other subspecialists involved in diagnosing AHT as well as for legal experts.

I look forward to your contributions.
