Parenting a Child with Disabilities

Message from the Guest Editors

Parenting a child with disabilities is a deeply complex and multifaceted experience that influences parental well-being, family functioning, and child development. This Special Issue seeks to explore the challenges, adaptations, and strengths of parents raising children with disabilities across diverse contexts. We invite original research, theoretical analyses, systematic reviews, and methodological innovations that provide new insights into parenting experiences and practices, support systems, and policy implications. Focus on Parenting This Special Issue prioritizes research that centers on the lived experiences of parents, examining their emotional, psychological, and social adaptation processes.
