Psychosocial Interventions for Children and Adolescents with Chronic or Long-Term Health Conditions

Message from the Guest Editors

Over the last decade, the number of children and adolescents living with chronic (or long-term) health conditions has risen worldwide. Living with a chronic health condition in childhood can be a cause for significant burden and persistent stress for children, adolescents and their families, and can result in lasting emotional and social consequences that impact daily life, functioning and wellbeing. The goal of this Special Issue in Children is to highlight the recent advances in psychosocial interventions for children and adolescents living with a range of chronic health conditions. We welcome original research considering novel approaches, including user-centred design and technology-based interventions, in which the primary target is the child and/or adolescent, with a focus on improving their clinical and psychosocial functioning outcomes.
