

Special Issue

Musculoskeletal Pain and Rehabilitation

Message from the Guest Editor

Musculoskeletal pain is one of the most burdensome problems in healthcare. It is affecting millions of people and represents an incredible social problem, both in terms of the inability to work and the economic consequences. Pharmacologic therapy is the most diffuse method of management, but frequently it is not enough, even using different classes of analgesics together in the so-called "multimodal analgesia". Rehabilitation is an important support for the management of patients affected by chronic musculoskeletal pain, and, in the majority of cases, it results in extremely valid support. This Special Issue of Clinics and Practice aims to make clear the real advantages and limits of rehabilitation in the treatment of these
