Computer Technologies for Human-Centered Cyber World

Message from the Guest Editor

Human-centered cyber systems are intrinsically multidisciplinary, which requires the collaboration of researchers and developers in systems science and engineering, human-machine systems, and cybernetics. We welcome original research contributions and manuscripts that have been substantially extended based on conference proceeding publications such as IEEE SMC. Topics of interests include any subjects in the areas of systems science and engineering, human-machine systems, and cybernetics, such as affective computing, cyber-physical systems, distributed intelligent systems, artificial life, human-computer interaction, augmented cognition, assistive technology, user interface design, usability study, robotic systems, machine vision, medical informatics, decision support systems, etc.
