

Special Issue

Mobile Fog and Edge Computing

Message from the Guest Editor

The interconnection of AI devices marks a pivotal event in the transition of society from the information age to the era of intelligence. Therefore, with the widespread adoption and application of an increasing number of intelligent devices, particularly mobile smart devices, traditional computational paradigms are encountering significant challenges in deployment, testing, and implementation. More flexible, data-proximate, and highly real-time computing architectures have become a focal point of joint interest in both academia and industry. Accordingly, this Special Issue focuses on mobile fog and edge computing, aiming to foster innovative discussions on corresponding topics to advance the development of computing paradigms adapted to the next generation of networks.
