Message from the Guest Editors

According to the industrial importance and wide application field of crystallization, active research is performed on a broad range of subjects covering fundamentals (e.g. phase equilibria, kinetics and crystallography), analytical tools for crystallization monitoring, separation process design and optimization, product development and, addresses integrated process chains and sustainability issues as well. Considering these variety of potential topics, the scope of this Special Issue on "Advances in Industrial Crystallization" is intentionally broad. We invite interdisciplinary contributions concerning both, understanding crystallization processes and crystallization behavior of compounds, and their applications in commodities and fine chemicals industries and sustainability fields.
