This Special Issue entitled “Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery” offers comprehensive coverage of new techniques, upfront developments, and innovative ideas in oral and maxillofacial surgery, including interdisciplinary aspects of cranial, facial, oral diseases, and their management.

The journal publishes articles that serve as a guide in the critical clinical practice of oral and maxillofacial surgery with an accurate insight to the future, and with attention to scientific literature.

Therefore, it is a subject that involves many specific topics such as aesthetic facial surgery, clinical pathology, computer-assisted surgery, congenital and craniofacial deformities, dentoalveolar surgery, head and neck oncology, implant dentistry, oral medicine, orthognathic surgery, reconstructive surgery, skull base surgery, TMJ, and trauma

Therefore, this will be a collection of articles by internationally renowned researchers and clinicians that will serve as a clinical practice manual to treat patients who are key players in social dentistry, to investigate the causes of diseases, and to promote minimally invasive and innovative oral and maxillofacial surgery.
