Clinical studies are a very important, as well as an indispensable, part of modern medicine, disease management and health care. A type of research study that tests how well new medical approaches work on human health is urgently needed. These studies test new methods of screening, prevention, diagnosis, or treatment of a disease.

As we all know, clinical studies are much more than routine clinical work with a patient. So, in order to conduct a proper clinical study with quality, additional time, knowledge, an organized study team, space and equipment are required.

With this Special Issue, I am inviting you to present your best current clinical studies with particular attention on the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of oral mucosal diseases and conditions affecting the maxillofacial region. Furthermore, any clinical study which provides new data (prevention, diagnostics and treatment) on oral health improvement, in general, are welcomed.
