Tradition and Innovation in Orthodontics

Message from the Guest Editor

This new Special Issue was born in the wake of celebrating 50 years since the foundation of the School of Specialization in Orthodontics of the University of Cagliari, the first in Italy and among the first in Europe. Over the years, the school has made a strong contribution and pushed the evolution of orthodontic discipline, having produced numerous illustrious professors and university directors and brilliant clinicians who have contributed to the strong innovative process over the last 30 years. This Special Issue was formed to create a scientific bridge, as well as a generational one, between traditional methods and techniques using the latest technologies and diagnostic advances that have characterized these last few years. Contributions in the form of literature reviews, retrospective and prospective studies, case reports, and case series of particular quality and high iconographic definition and solid methodology are welcomed to be submitted.
