Emerging Biomarkers of Clinical Diagnosis

Message from the Guest Editor

Biomarkers are essential components in diagnosing a disease or pathogenic process, monitoring patients, and providing a prognosis for patients. Any biological indicator that can be tested can be used as a biomarker, including DNA, RNA, proteins, metabolites, blood, urine, and so on. Other physiological and morphological biomarkers may also be measured or used for clinical or diagnostic imaging. Biomarkers are of significant therapeutic value in the early diagnosis of disease when the clinical symptoms are not yet obvious and will prolong patients' lives or enhance their quality of life. This Special Issue investigates the rapidly developing area of emerging biomarkers in clinical diagnosis and their applications, which offer a novel approach to the clinical care of patients.
