Artificial Intelligence in Skin Disorders 2025

Message from the Guest Editor

The field of dermatology has long been an early adopter of artificial intelligence (AI) technologies. On the heels of rapid advancements in this technology, from computer vision algorithms for image-based diagnostics to large language models assisting in clinical decision making, AI presents novel opportunities to improve the accuracy, efficiency, and personalization of skin disorder management. This Special Issue on “Artificial Intelligence in Skin Disorders 2025” will highlight state-of-the-art research and innovations that leverage AI to address the entire spectrum of dermatological conditions, including inflammatory diseases, autoimmune disorders, complex genetic syndromes, infectious conditions, and various forms of skin cancer.
