Diagnostics in Medical/Surgical Emergency

Message from the Guest Editor

Medical and surgical emergency admissions are a major burden on the health system. Diagnostic approaches with the use of both urgent point-of-care testing and other diagnostic tools are essential in making a timely diagnosis. This ensures that optimal treatment is provided in these time-sensitive conditions. We invite Special Issue contributions that examine the role of diagnostic tools in the following emergency conditions in medical and surgical emergencies. Articles will undergo full peer review in line with the journal standards. Contributions can be in the form of case series, trials and review articles.
