Gastric Cancer: Diagnosis and Management

Message from the Guest Editors

Gastric cancer has ranked as the third leading cause of cancer mortality worldwide, although recent innovation of surgery and chemotherapy, including targeted therapies and immune checkpoint inhibitors, has changed clinical practice. Therefore, early detection and improvement of cancer management has been required. In this Special Issue, we will discuss the recent discovery of molecular alteration to detect cancer development and progression, advances in endoscopic diagnosis and surgical treatment, and new findings of chemotherapy, targeted therapy and immunotherapy for gastric cancer. We intend for this Special Issue to be informative for all researchers of gastric cancer.
