Headache and Concomitant Disorders: Diagnosis, Treatment and Management

Message from the Guest Editors

We invite investigators to contribute original research, such as observational, experimental or validation studies, systematic reviews and meta-analyses, as well as case series and case reports that focus on how these interactions at the molecular level affect the correct management, both diagnostically and therapeutically, of headaches. Potential topics may include (but are not limited to): the clinical and molecular association between headaches and other systems or disorders; the function of biomarkers in headache diagnosis; the biological effects of physiotherapy, therapeutic exercise or pharmacological treatment on patients with headaches or related disorders in the cranium–cervical region; and new advances in the diagnosis, pathophysiological mechanisms or treatment of headaches.
